

Organically Grown Company purchases 100% renewable energy.

Since 1982, Organically Grown Company has served as the largest wholesaler of organic fruits, vegetables and herbs in the Pacific Northwest. They provide service to natural and fine foods retailers, super-market chains, restaurants, juicing companies, food processors and other wholesalers. Their mission is to promote health through organic agriculture as a leading sustainable organization. Purchasing Clean Wind at the 100% level fit right in with this mission, where they constantly ask how everything they do can be accomplished in a way that is good for business, good for people and good for the planet.

“We are beginning to see a paradigm shift,” says Tyson Haworth, operations manager. “Where questions like ‘why does it make business sense to support Clean Wind energy?’ become ‘why does it make business sense to support dirty fossil fuel energy?’”

Mr. Haworth emphasizes the business advantage of purchasing renewable power. “Our customers are very supportive,” he says. “Collectively, we are making an investment in building capacity for renewable energy. In the short term, this may cost more, but over the long haul we’re helping the region develop energy security through the development of renewable energy. This makes sense not only for our business, but for our community as well.”
